This optimization, often referred to as energy arbitrage, involves buying electricity when prices are low (e.g., during periods of high renewable generation and/or low demand) and selling it when prices are high (e.g., during peak demand and/or low generation).

This optimization, often referred to as energy arbitrage, involves buying electricity when prices are low (e.g., during periods of high renewable generation and/or low demand) and selling it when prices are high (e.g., during peak demand and/or low generation).

In one of our last blog posts, we explored how battery energy storage systems (BESS) can be strategically optimized within the spot market, leveraging price fluctuations in Day-Ahead, Intraday Auction, and Intraday Continuous markets to generate revenue. This optimization, often referred to as North America is at the forefront of a global energy transformation, leveraging its vast renewable resources to power a sustainable future. With a remarkable 2,460 gigawatts of renewable energy installed by 2023, the region is rapidly outpacing conventional sources. This progress is fueled by.
